Course Summary

Criminology

Criminology at the University of Suffolk draws on Sociology, Psychology, Law, Social Policy and Philosophy in order to expose students to a range of classical and contemporary theoretical and empirical debates concerning crime and responses to criminal behaviour. Students are actively encouraged to develop good analytical and reasoning skills as they engage with academic literature and evaluate research and evidence.

Criminology students will be able to critically engage with national and international dimensions of crime and criminal justice policy, and develop well informed views on contested public issues. There is a strong emphasis on challenging “common-sense” notions of criminal and deviant behaviours by critically examining academic research and making informed decisions based on available evidence. To this end, students will be introduced to a variety of research methods and ethical considerations, so that they can challenge and understand the limitations and ambiguities of empirical research, whilst assessing its value. This will provide an excellent theoretical and practical platform for the completion of a third year dissertation in an area of personal or career interest.

Youth Studies

At the University of Suffolk, Youth Studies is informed by critical and social constructionist paradigms. However, we extend this by encouraging students to examine how theory might illuminate experiences and understandings of youth, but also how empirical experience and understanding might contribute to conceptual knowledge. Youth Studies is interdisciplinary encompassing aspects of criminology, cultural studies, political science, psychology, sociology and social policy. Youth Studies at the University of Suffolk has a temporal dimension examining the emergence of youth and its academic coverage and a spatial dimension being concerned with Suffolk, the UK and the wider world both in overdeveloped and underdeveloped contexts. The modules develop both conceptual and applied understandings of youth covering, but not limited to, comparative international perspectives, culture and identity, welfare and social policy, working with young people and the historical development of both youth and our conceptualisation of it. Indicative themes explored include youth and education, family, the labour market, politics and health, youth identity, consumption and subculture, and youth and development and underdevelopment.

Course Aims

- To develop students' knowledge, critical understanding and skills in Criminology and Youth Studies
- To cultivate a questioning and critical approach to the understanding of human behaviour and society
- To encourage cognitive development and autonomous learning
- To develop subject specific, cognitive and key transferable skills of value in employment, further study and personal development
- To provide opportunities that facilitate widening participation by local/non-standard entrants to study criminology and youth studies
