Course Summary

Many Business Schools continue to treat the constellation of subject disciplines which constitute Economics, Banking and Finance as, either, a branch of science or as a special form of applied mathematics. This course seeks to develop a broader and more rounded appreciation of the theories, practices and preferences which shape policy on such things as government spending, taxation and banking policy.

To allow students to understand and – in the fullness of time – to intervene usefully and purposefully in the debates which structure public policy, political decision-making and business strategy this course treats Economics, Banking and Finance social scientifically. The course therefore combines the study of microeconomics and macroeconomics with the analysis of ethics, entrepreneurship, banking and finance and business strategy.

In the study of Economics, Banking and Finance therefore we use the tools of social scientific inquiry to examine the complex, contested and often controversial field that is too easily reduced to “EBF”. Thus we consider the key factors – employment, taxation, public spending, baking policy and financial regulation that in so many ways shape our lives and the fortunes of our communities.

Course Aims

- To provide students with a critical understanding of the key principles of economics, banking and finance shaped by a need to ensure their appropriate application.
- To generate an appreciation of the economic and welfare dimensions of wider social, political, legal and environmental issues.
- To ensure a firm foundation of knowledge about the workings of national and global economies and the financial services industry.
- To foster the development of relevant skills, including the usage of appropriate tools of analysis to support business decision-making in a range of settings.
- To develop the necessary analytical skills and simplifying frameworks for the solution of specific theoretical and applied problems in economics, banking and finance at both national and global levels.
- To provide students with an ability to interpret real world economic developments, events and organisations and critically assess the influences which these have in the arena of banking and finance.
- To provide students with a valuable and positive learning experience in their academic studies from which students can proceed to further studies in economics, banking and/ or finance and to multi-disciplinary areas.
