Course Summary

The University of Suffolk provides students with firm grounding in the subject of law and the contexts in which law and legal institutions function. This course allows students to develop a wide range of skills, combining their core subject knowledge in law with additional insight in criminology and criminal justice. Students will have the opportunity to develop skills in legal and empirical research, including quantitative data. Students will be introduced to a variety of research methods and ethical considerations, so that they can challenge and understand the limitations and ambiguities of empirical research, whilst assessing its value. It is expected that students will be able to produce a final year research dissertation with the application of legal knowledge in the context of criminal justice. As this course also covers the foundations of legal knowledge subjects, those students intending to embark on careers in legal practice will be exempted from the academic stage of legal training as determined by the Bar Standards Board and the Solicitor’s Regulation Authority, or gain exemptions from aspects of the CILEX programme for specialist lawyers.
