Course Summary

The University of Suffolk provides students with firm grounding in the subject of law and the contexts in which law and legal institutions function. This course allows students to develop a wider range of skills and subject knowledge alongside law by taking modules in sociology on relevant and important aspects of the real world that are complex and challenging. In addition to engaging in legal reasoning, students also learn how to analyse the impact of law in society. Students will be introduced to a variety of research methods and ethical considerations, so that they can challenge and understand the limitations and ambiguities of empirical research, whilst assessing its value. Students will have the opportunity to develop skills in legal and empirical social science research, including quantitative skills, through to a final year dissertation. Those intending to embark on careers in legal practice will be exempted from the academic stage of legal training as determined by the Bar Standards Board and the Solicitor’s Regulation Authority, or gain exemptions from aspects of the CILEX programme for specialist lawyers.
