Course Summary

Politics is about the operation of power, and its impact on people in political units of countries, counties, towns, villages or communities. The operation of power may result in war, gradual economic growth or funding for a village hall, but all are clearly political. Politics studies the changing process of making decisions in different political arena. Sociology is about the major contours of the modern world. It is these contours of state, work, money and how people live that shapes the environment in which politics takes place. Sociology studies the patterns within the social environment in which politics operates. The study of politics and sociology are often deeply intertwined but sometimes use different perspectives, methods and questions. There
